My Story

I applied to my current university with no direction or ambitions as to who I want to become. I decided to pursue petroleum engineering. I quickly realised I had no passion for this industry because it conflicted some basic beliefs I had. However, I pursued it nonetheless.

Fast forward, I took a python class and it sparked my interest in programming. I just couldn't stop thinking about it. I started to watch youtube videos, take udemy courses, w3schools, freecodecamp among other resources to develop the skills I have now. But I am not satisfied. I need more training and I am eager to study and fight my way through to become a full stack developer.
